ABSTRACT

The report presents data on the distribution of Native American students, faculty, and staff in Oklahoma's public postsecondary education institutions, including community colleges. Data (tables, charts, maps, and narrative) are presented for: Oklahoma's share of Native Americans within the U.S. population; the state's Native American population since 1890; distribution of the general and student populations by race; proportion of Native Americans in postsecondary education, by tribe; Native American enrollments (proportional and headcount); enrollment by tribe and institution; distribution of Native American administrators, faculty, and staff; and ten-year enrollment trends. In some cases, comparisons are made with other ethnic/racial groups. Appended materials include: student enrollment by institution, class level, gender, and tribe; areas of declared major and fields of study; and maps detailing enrollment of Oklahoma tribes by county of residence, headquarters city, and proportion attending each postsecondary institution. EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

- According to the 1990 U.S. Census, 12.9 percent of all the Native Americans in the United States live in Oklahoma, which ties California as the largest Native American-populated state proportionately in the country.

- Native Americans are 8.0 percent of the Oklahoma population, which ranks third nationally after Alaska and New Mexico.

- Native Americans are 38.9 percent of the Oklahoma minority population.

- Various sources disagree about the number of Native Americans who live in Oklahoma. The 1990 U.S. Census reports 209,655 fewer Native Americans than the 1994 Oklahoma Indian Affairs Commission.

- The largest percentage of the Native American population live in the 47 most eastern counties of the state.

- The three largest tribes in Oklahoma--the Cherokee Nation, the Choctaw Nation, and the Creek Nation--have 7.5 percent of their combined total tribal population enrolled in public institutions of higher education. These three tribes also account for almost 60 percent of the total number of Native Americans enrolled in public higher education institutions.

- Native Americans comprise 7.8 percent of the enrollment in public institutions of higher education, fall 1994.

- Native American students attend comprehensive universities at rates comparable to the student population as a whole. They are also more likely than the total student population to attend regional four-year institutions. Over one-half of the Native American student population attends four-year schools as compared to less than one-third of the total student population.

- Native American students are more likely to attend the Oklahoma public institutions of higher education that have larger numbers of other Native American students, administrators, faculty, and staff who are also Native American than public institutions of higher education that have smaller numbers.

- More Native American students are female than male. This is also true of the total student population in public institutions of higher education; however, the percentage of female is somewhat larger for Native Americans.

- Native Americans are more likely to be freshmen and sophomores than the general student population and less likely to be graduate students than the general student population.

- Native American students are more likely to declare education as their major program area than students in the general population and they are less likely to be "undeclared" than the total student population.

- Of the 3,400 institutions of higher education in the United States reporting to the U.S. Department of Education, Oklahoma ranks third in the total number of Native Americans in higher education.

- A subset of the U.S. Department of Education reporting institutions were selected and ranked that were comparable with Oklahoma institutions on the bases of the percentage of Native Americans in the state population and the number of students enrolled at an institution. Four of the bachelor's degree granting institutions are Oklahoma public institutions, with Northeastern State University in Tahlequah ranking second by number of Native American students enrolled. Nine of the 16 ranked two-year institutions are also Oklahoma public institutions.

- Though individual tribes vary, approximately one-third of all Native Americans who attend public institutions in Oklahoma choose either Northeastern State University (15.1 percent), Southeastern Oklahoma State University (10 percent), or Oklahoma State University (8 percent) when choosing an institution to attend.

- Since 1984, Native American enrollments have increased at all institutional tiers. The number of students enrolled at comprehensive universities more than doubled during the ten-year period. The largest enrollment increases for Native American students were at the four-year regional and two-year institutional tiers. This growth mirrors growth in the overall student population at these tiers. However, overall student population at comprehensive universities during this time decreased.

INTRODUCTION

INTRODUCTION

It is the current and historical practice of the Oklahoma State Regents for Higher Education to promote equality of opportunity in education and, when within their authority, to mitigate the effects of discrimination. Not only do the Regents and their staff operate on the assumption that each individual person has the right to higher education, but they also operate on the proposition that equity within the educational system is essential in order to foster a climate for true learning. Toward these objectives, the Regents have adopted an operational policy on social justice within the State System of higher education. That policy is:

> To make possible the participation of all able persons at the highest attainable level of academic life regardless of their race, ethnic background, sex, age, religion, handicap, income level, or geographic location; and to provide for social justice in the form of equitable and fair treatment and for systematic adjustments in the form of positive action until equity is attained.

This report is an element of that policy and acts as a continuing implementation of the social justice initiative. The report is descriptive in that it contains information about the number and distribution of Native Americans in the Oklahoma State System.

The information contained within this report is based on recent data available to this office and is presented to the reader in order to discuss the distribution of Native Americans in the public sector of The Oklahoma State System of Higher Education. This report is intended as an informational report. It is designed to present a substantial amount of data to the reader.

Native Americans have not always been perceived as successful in American higher education. Educational institutions have, at times, insisted that Native Americans must give up their culture and become, or act like, members of the dominant culture. The suggestion that Native Americans must act like "whites" to receive a good education is not unusual. Native Americans, their history, and their desire to carry on the traditions of their ancestors have often been ignored.

Since 1950, the Native American population has increased substantially—even beyond basic demographic expansion of the general population. This is not only attributed to increasing birth rates, but also to an increase in the number of individuals who have reclaimed their Native American status. Some of this move toward reclaiming "Indianness" may be a response to relaxing prejudices nationwide. Individuals who once hid their heritage are recognizing the importance of asserting their cultural uniqueness. However, others have begun claiming a heritage to which they only have distant rights. Many people, who now claim the right to be Native American, have very little tribal affiliation. Debate has been generated over whether being Native American is a racial, ethnic, cultural, legal, or genetic identity.

Because of the nature and sources of data, most of the data in this report are based on self-identification. If an individual declares that he or she is a Native American, then he or she is so counted. In one's own mind, he or she may have taken any or all of the above-mentioned criteria into consideration and made the decision to declare one's self "Native American." However, once a student or employee has stated that he or she is a Native American, one more question is asked, "to what tribe do you belong?"

The Oklahoma State System's Unitized Data System (UDS) collects "Native American" data in this way—self-identification—which is similar to the method used in the 1970, 1980, and 1990 United States Censuses. The 1970 census was the first attempt in recent history in which self-declaration was used to identify a person's racial or ethnic classification. Prior to 1970, a census interview classified the respondent in a racial or ethnic category based on his or her perception. This change in data-gathering techniques may account for some of the increase in the number of Native Americans.

It is important to note, however, that to many in the Native American community, self-declaration is not the desired method of counting the number of Native Americans in the population. It allows too many "paper Indians" into the ranks of Native Americans. These "paper Indians" typically fall into one of two subcategories. The first type is the re-tribed Native American. These people tend to belong to the general American culture in dress, speech, lifestyle, etc. In many cases, however, they may be card-carrying tribal members that have recently decided to declare their "Indian-ness" and return to the traditions of their ancestors.

A second type of "paper Indian" is more of a non-biological Native American. This category includes and extends from a non-Indian spouse of an Indian to doctors, lawyers, or social workers that may have worked around Native Americans for a number of years and have been "adopted" into the tribe. This group is undoubtedly smaller than the first group but present nonetheless. We are aware that the population baseline drawn from these data is far from perfect. It is, however, a place to begin the discussion.

POPULATION PROFILE

POPULATION PROFILE

The Native American population reported in the United States Census increased from about 360,000 to over 1.9 million in 1990. This number includes Alaskan Natives, Native Americans in the United States, and the Aleut populations. This report will use the term Native American to refer to all of these groups. Furthermore, Native Americans within specific tribes further classify themselves into clans, groups, or family names that often cross tribal boundaries. Distributing Native Americans in the various subcategories is too cumbersome for the scope of this report. Therefore, only the tribes will be addressed in the data. To add a further caveat, many Native Americans hold dual or multiple memberships. In this database, only the first tribe reported is used.

In addition, as a point of understanding, Native Americans may also be legitimately considered to be included in one of the following racial groups: White, Black, Hispanic, or Asian. In this database, however, if a person is counted as a Native American, he or she is not also counted as White, Black, Hispanic, or Asian.

There are numerous differences between the general population and the subgroups of the population in the United States. One of the more interesting differences between Native Americans and the general population is where they make their homes. Native Americans reside throughout the United States, but most live west of the Mississippi in the western and southwestern states. Historically, of course, this was not necessarily a matter of choice for all tribes. Of the ten states with the highest Native American population, only North Carolina, New York, and Michigan are east of the Mississippi River.

In fact, according to the 1990 U.S. Census, four states together account for almost 43 percent of the total Native American population: Oklahoma with 12.9 percent, California with 12.9 percent, Arizona with 10.4 percent, and New Mexico with 6.9 percent (Figure 1). The 10 states shown in Figure 1 account for 54.5 percent of the total Native American population in the country. Two out of every three Native Americans living in the United States reside in one of these 10 states. About one-half of the Native American population live in five of these states: Oklahoma, California, Arizona, New Mexico, and Alaska. Thus, the Native American population in the United States is concentrated in geographic enclaves.

Oklahoma has the highest number of Native Americans in the United States. Of the nearly 1.9 million Native Americans nationally, 12.9 percent of them live in the state of Oklahoma. The U.S. Census indicates that Oklahoma's percentage of Native Americans has increased over the past decade (Table 1). In 1960, Oklahoma had 12.4 percent of the country's Native American population while in 1980, the state's proportion had dropped to 11.5 percent, and in 1990, it increased to 12.9 percent. The number of Native Americans in the United States has increased by 274 percent since 1960; the number of Native Americans in the state of Oklahoma has increased by 290 percent.

States were not only ranked to determine which states contained the largest number of Native Americans according the U.S. Census, but also to determine which states had the largest proportion of Native Americans in their total population. Figure 2 lists the top 10 states. Though California has a large number of Native Americans in the United States, it is not listed, as Native Americans are a low proportion of their total population. Alaska is at the top of the list, with 15.6 percent of its 550,000 residents who are Native American, followed by New Mexico with 8.9 percent of its 1.5 million who are Native American, and Oklahoma with 8.0 percent of its 3.1 million residents who are Native American.

Figure 2

From Figures 1 and 2, it can be seen that not only does Oklahoma rank first in the country by number of Native Americans in the population, but it also ranks third in the country by the proportion of Native Americans in the total state population. Oklahoma continues to be the state that has the highest concentration of Native Americans relative to its size. It would be reasonable to infer that if the Native American population were to equitably participate in higher education in America, Oklahoma would be crucial to that participation.

Using the 1990 census data and looking more specifically at the state of Oklahoma, the 252,420 Native Americans comprise 8.0 percent of the state's total population, or one of every 12 people. Furthermore, Native Americans are 38.9 percent of the recognized Oklahoma minority population. Table 2 displays the percentage of Native Americans as reported in Oklahoma in the state census from 1890 to 1990. The percentage of Native Americans in the total state population was high in 1890, then, decreased substantially through 1920. In 1930, the percentage increased slightly but was back down again in 1940. Since 1940, the percentage has slowly increased to 8.0 percent in 1990. This fluctuation may be due to many things other than actual in-migration and out-migration of Native Americans. Again, the previously discussed problem concerning the definition of Native American must be considered as a possible cause.

Table 3 presents the Native American population in Oklahoma by tribe according to two different sources—the 1990 U.S. census and the 1994 State of Oklahoma Indian Affairs Commission. The difference between the figures reported is also listed. The data are presented in this manner to highlight the differences that exist in determining the actual number of Native Americans in Oklahoma. There are methodological differences in gathering of the data that must be considered. The U.S. Census is completed once every ten years and is a "canvas" survey of residents. The State of Oklahoma Indian Affairs Commission updates its figures by making telephone contact with each tribal headquarter each year and taking the actual number from the roll. Therefore, the differences can be tremendous.

SOURCE: 1990 U.S. Census

Consistent with the national Native American population, Table 3 indicates that a very large proportion of the state's population of Native Americans belong to the Cherokee Nation and the Choctaw Nation. The Creek Nation ranks third in tribal representation in the state according to both sources. The category " and Other Tribe Not Specified" represents those Native Americans that reported membership in tribes that had fewer than 400 members according to U.S. Census data. Interestingly, in the 1990 U.S. Census, 6.6

percent of the Native Americans were placed in the "Tribe not specified/reported" category. This category includes Native American not reporting a specific tribal affiliation, or reporting one that is not typically found in Oklahoma. It also includes Alaskan Natives and Aleuts.

Perusal of Table 3 reveals many differences between the 1990 U.S. Census and the 1994 State of Oklahoma Indian Affairs Commission listing. The Apache tribe is the only tribe in the state of Oklahoma reporting a smaller membership in the State of Oklahoma Indian Affairs Commission listing than was reported in the 1990 U.S. Census. All other Oklahoma tribes report an increase in membership. The increases vary from a substantial percentage increase of 4,760.4 for the United Keetoowah Band of Cherokee (159 to 7,728) and a 575 percent increase for the Wyandotte tribe (536 to 3,618) to a minimum percent increase of 20 for the Sac and Fox Nation (1,833 to 2,200).

The three largest tribes in Oklahoma--Cherokee Nation, Choctaw Nation, and Creek Nation—show increases of an average of 77.7 percent. The Cherokee Nation increased from 84,301 in the 1990 U.S. Census to 159,438 in the 1994 State of Oklahoma Indian Affairs Commission listing (69.1 percent increase); the Choctaw Nation, from 43,062 to 87,376 (102.9 percent increase); and the Creek Nation, from 23,955 to 38,583 (61.1 percent increase). Overall, the number of Native Americans in Oklahoma increased by 221,829, or 88 percent, between 1990 and 1994. This change could be an indication of the increasing claim to "Indian-ness," the growing interest of thousands of Oklahomans to return to their heritage, or the in-migration of Native Americans to Oklahoma tribes from other states. One conclusion that can be drawn, however, is that tremendous variations do exist in the reported Native American population in Oklahoma for many reasons. Once again, consider the differences in measurement, recording, and purposes for gathering the information.

Figure 3 displays the distribution of total Oklahoma Native Americans within each county. The five counties with the largest numbers of Native Americans are Tulsa (25,401), Oklahoma (24,313), Cherokee (11,380), Muskogee (9,049), and Cleveland (8,959). The five counties with the fewest number of Native Americans are Harper (30), Cimarron (32), Harmon (38), Beaver (62), and Ellis (66). Generally speaking, counties with the largest number of Native Americans are in the eastern half of the state and the counties with the fewest number of Native Americans are in the western half of the state.

Figure 4 provides the percentage of the state population who are Native American within each county. The Native American population is more rural and less urbanized than the rest of the state's population. According to the 1990 U.S. Census, only 33 percent of the Native American population of Oklahoma live in urban areas. While the Native American population is less urbanized than the rest of the state's population, approximately 20 percent of the Native Americans in Oklahoma live within the two major metropolitan areas of Tulsa and Oklahoma City.

This pattern is repeated at the county level also. With the exception of Caddo County, the counties with the highest proportion of the total population who are Native American are located in the eastern half of the state; and the counties with the lowest proportion of the population who are Native American are located in the western half of the state. Adair, Cherokee, Delaware, Caddo, and Sequoyah counties are the top five counties with 43.8 percent, 33.4 percent, 25.3 percent, 22.6 percent, and 20.7 percent, respectively. Further examination of Figures 3 and 4 shows that the largest percentage of the Oklahoma Native American population can be accounted for in the eastern 47 counties of Oklahoma.

NATIVE AMERICANS
IN HIGHER EDUCATION IN OKLAHOMA

NATIVE AMERICANS IN HIGHER EDUCATION IN OKLAHOMA

Of the 159,998 students enrolled in public institutions in Oklahoma higher education, fall 1994, 7.8 percent were Native American (Table 4 and Figure 5) compared with 8.0 percent of the general population. Whites accounted for 77.3 percent of the enrollment of public institutions of higher education and 82.1 percent of the general population. Blacks accounted for 7.2 percent of the enrollment and 7.4 percent of the population. Hispanics constituted 2.1 percent of the enrollment and 2.7 percent of the population. Asians accounted for 2.1 percent of the enrollment and 1.1 percent of the population. Appendix A provides a detailed presentation of Native American student enrollment in public institutions of higher education by tribe, class level, and gender for fall 1994. Figure 6 shows the distribution of the total student enrollment by type of institution as well as the distribution of Native American student enrollment by type of institution. Native American students attended comprehensive institutions at rates comparable to the total student enrollment. However, quite a difference is evident when two-year and regional four-year institution enrollment distributions are compared. Native American students were much more likely to attend four-year institutions than other students. In fact, over one-half of the Native Americans who attended public institutions of higher education went to four-year institutions compared with less than one-third of the general student population who attended two-year colleges. Over the last decade, Native American enrollment at comprehensive universities and two-year colleges has increased, whereas regional four-year institutional enrollment has decreased. During the same period, the general student population enrollment in regional four-year institutions increased substantially, and comprehensive and two-year institutional enrollments decreased.

NOTE: The Hispanic population may also be included in one or more of the racial groups. Therefore, the sum of all groups may exceed 100 percent.

Differences can also be seen between general student participation and Native American participation in higher education when the distribution of students is compared by class level. Figure 7 shows the distribution of students for fall 1994 in public institutions of higher education for all races combined and for Native American students by class level. The most substantial differences are seen in the distribution of freshmen and unclassified students. Almost 40 percent of the Native American students were represented in the freshman class level while only 31 percent of the general student population was represented in the freshman class. Seven percent of the Native American students were unclassified while 10 percent of the total student population were unclassified.

At the higher class levels, the two groups appear to be quite comparable with the exception of the graduate level. Only six percent of the Native American students were classified as graduate students. In comparison, 10 percent of the total student population were graduate students (Appendix A).

Figure 8 provides a comparison of Native American students and the total student population by sex. Higher proportions of females than males attend institutions of higher education for both Native Americans and the total student population. However, the trend seems to be slightly more prominent for Native Americans when compared with the total student population. Of the 159,998 total enrollment in public institutions of higher education, 88,551 (55.3 percent) were female and 71,447 (44.7) percent were male. Of the 12,441 Native American student enrollment in public institutions, 7,305 (58.7 percent) were female and 5,136 (41.3 percent) were male (Appendix A).

The two groups, Native American students and the total student population, are also compared by area of declared major for fall 1994. Figure 9 displays important differences in two program areas, education and "other/undecided" categories. Native Americans were less likely to be enrolled in the "other/undecided" area than the total student population. They were more likely to declare a major in the area of education than the total population. In general, Native American students may be entering school with more specific goals than the total student population. Appendix B provides a complete list of areas of declared majors and fields of study.

Table 5 presents the proportion of the Oklahoma Native American population in higher education by tribal affiliation. According to 1990 U.S. Census figures, none of the 33 tribes in Oklahoma have more than 3.4 percent of their tribe enrolled in public institutions of higher education. The tribes with the highest percentage represented in public institutions of higher education in Oklahoma are the Apache (3.4 percent of 1,400), the Cherokee Nation (2.7 percent of 159,438), and the Iowa tribe (2.6 percent of 455). The United Keetowah Band of Cherokee have the smallest proportion of their tribe enrolled in public institutions of higher education (0.1 percent of 7,728). The three largest tribes in

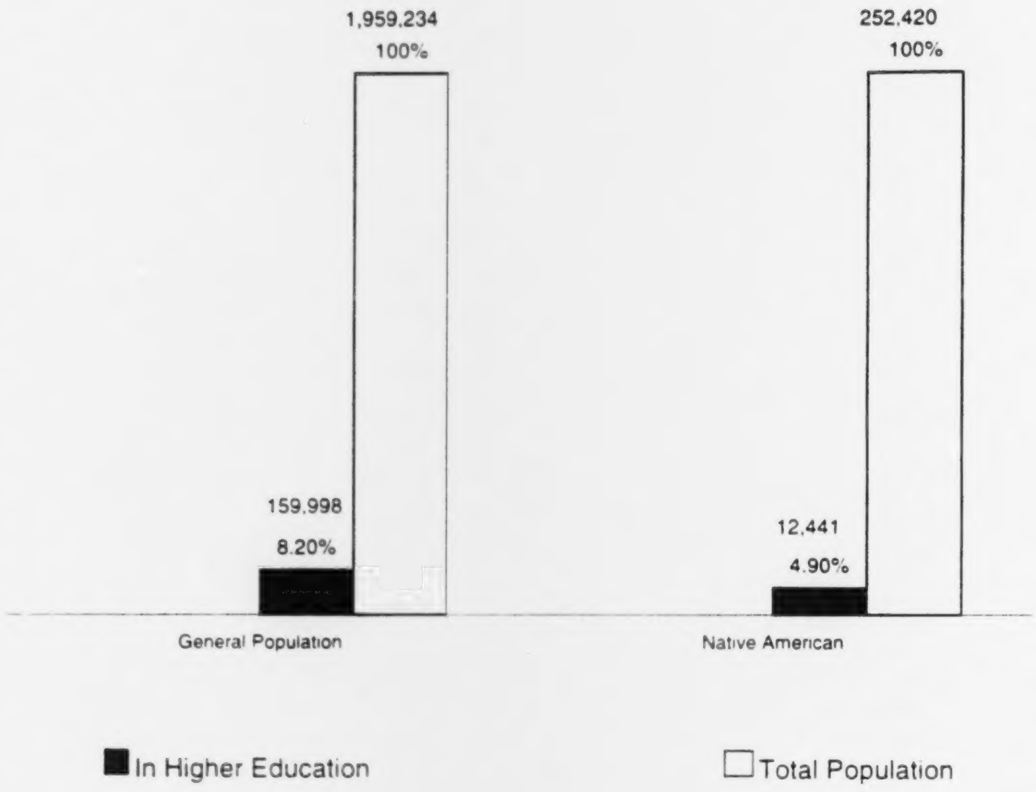
PERCENT PARTICIPATION OF GENERAL POPULATION AND NATIVE AMERICAN POPULATION IN OKLAHOMA PUBLIC INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION, FALL 1994



SOURCES 1990 U S Census and UDSENR14 (12/8/95). Fall 1994

Oklahoma—the Cherokee Nation, the Choctaw Nation, and the Creek Nation-have 7.5 percent of their combined population enrolled in public institutions of higher education. It is important to remember that none of the figures in this report include enrollment in private institutions or out-of-state institutions of higher education. Therefore, the actual proportion of individual tribes involved in higher education could vary accordingly.

The three largest tribes encompass 58.7 percent of the Oklahoma Native Americans enrolled in public higher education during fall 1994: the Cherokee Nation (4,260 of 159,438), the Choctaw Nation (2,149 of 87,376), and the Creek Nation (889 of 35,583). Figure 10 compares the rate of attendance for the general population with that of the Native American population for fall 1994. Of the 1,959,234 total residents of the state, 8.2 percent (159,998) attended public institutions; of the 252,420 Native Americans in the state, only 4.9 percent (12,441) attended public institutions. The rate of attendance for Native Americans is just over one-half the rate of attendance for the general population.

In the April 28, 1995 issue of The Chronicle of Higher Education, enrollments in over 3,400 schools reporting to the U.S. Department of Education in fall 1993 were examined by race.

The 3,400 schools were more closely examined in order to compare only public institutions. In addition, in order to compare public institutions in other states that were similar to public institutions in Oklahoma, only other state institutions that met Oklahoma criteria of size and proportion of Native Americans in their general state population were selected. Most public institutions in Oklahoma have at least 500 students and 5.6 percent of Oklahoma residents are Native American. Consequently, all public institutions reporting to the U.S. Department of Education, fall 1993, with enrollments of 500 or more students having a proportion of Native American students of at least 8.0 percent of their total student body were selected to identify the locations of highest concentration of Native Americans attending institutions of higher education. Table 6 lists the public bachelor's degree-granting institutions meeting these criteria. Table 7 lists the public two-year institutions also meeting these criteria. Both tables rank institutions by the total number of Native American students enrolled in the institution.

Table 6 lists Northeastern State University in Tahlequah as the public bachelor's degree-granting institution in the United States with the second-largest number of Native American students enrolled—1,787 (19.9 percent of 8,982 total students). Southeastern Oklahoma State University in Durant, ranks third in the country with 1,253 Native American students enrolled (30.8 percent of 4,069 total students). Two additional Oklahoma institutions are represented in Table 6: East Central University in Ada ranked eighth with 522 Native Americans students enrolled (11.9 percent of 4,387 total students) and the University of Science and Arts of Oklahoma ranked twelfth with 158 Native American students enrolled (9.7 percent of 1,626 students).

According to Table 7, Oklahoma accounts for nine of the 16 public two year-institutions in the United States with 500 or more students and with at least 5.6 percent Native American students. Rogers State College in Claremore is the highest-ranking Oklahoma institution ranked third overall with 506 Native American students enrolled. It was followed by Oklahoma State University's Okmulgee Branch in Okmulgee, Oklahoma, ranked fifth with 446 Native American students. Also represented are: Northeastern Oklahoma A&M College in Miami, Oklahoma (ranked sixth with 429 Native American students); Eastern Oklahoma State College in Wilburton (ranked seventh with 406 Native American students); Carl Albert State College in Poteau, (ranked eighth with 332 Native American students); Connors State College in Warner (ranked tenth having 272 Native American students), Seminole State College in Seminole (ranked eleventh with 270 Native American students); Redlands Community College in El Reno (ranked thirteenth with 147 Native American students); Northern Oklahoma College in Tonkawa (ranked fourteenth with 142 Native American students); and Murray State College in Tishomingo (ranked twenty-fifth with 98 Native American students). Figure 11 geographically displays the location of all public institutions in the state of Oklahoma. The Oklahoma institutions listed in Tables 6 and 7 are highlighted.

The five largest schools within The Oklahoma State System of Higher Education—University of Oklahoma, Oklahoma State University, Tulsa Community College, University of Central Oklahoma, and Oklahoma City Community College—had an average of just under five percent of their unduplicated headcount enrollments reported as Native American during the fall 1994 semester (Table 8). Interestingly, less than 42 percent of the public institutions in the state of Oklahoma had more than 10 percent representation of Native Americans in the general student population. Every institution with 10 percent or more Native American students is located outside a major metropolitan statistical area and outside a traditionally heavily populated area. Furthermore, most of these institutions with more than 10 percent Native American enrollment are located in what would be considered "rural" areas of Oklahoma.

Table 9 provides a listing of the number of Native American students per public institution in Oklahoma, the percentage of total institution enrollment which is Native American per institution, and the percentage of total Native American enrollment in Oklahoma that is Native American per institution for fall 1994. Institutions are listed in rank order by number of Native American students enrolled. Northeastern State University (NSU), the seventh largest school in the state, had the highest proportion of total Native American student enrollments in the state (15.1 percent of 12,451) and the second highest proportion of Native American headcount enrollment (21.0 percent of 8,946). Southeastern Oklahoma State University (SEOSU) had the highest proportion of Native American student headcount enrollment (31.4 percent of 3,967 students).

Table 10 shows first-time enrollment for Native American students for each public institution. Of the 2,573 first-time Native American students who enrolled in fall 1994, 11.3 percent of them enrolled at NSU and 7.3 percent enrolled at SEOSU. Overall, 55.3 percent of the first-time Native American students enrolled at two-year schools while 44.7 percent enrolled at bachelor's degree-granting schools. Once again, of the 44.7 percent enrolling at bachelor's degree-granting schools, nearly one-half enrolled at NSU or SEOSU.

Table 11 continues the examination of Native American attendance at institutions of higher education by tribe. The tribes are listed in rank order by the percentage of Native Americans per tribe in public institutions for fall 1994. More than one-half (63 percent) of the Native Americans in public institutions within The Oklahoma State System of Higher Education were from the Cherokee Nation (35.2 percent), the Choctaw Nation (19.3 percent), or the Creek Nation (8.5 percent).

Also, the largest tribe in Oklahoma, the Cherokee Nation, has the highest percentage of its students attending Northeastern State University (30 percent), followed by Oklahoma State University (nine percent), and Southeastern Oklahoma State University (9 percent). Each individual tribe can be examined in the same manner. Overall, Northeastern State University is chosen by 15 percent of the Native American students, Southeastern Oklahoma State University is chosen by 10 percent of the Native American students, and the University of Oklahoma is chosen by 10 percent of the Native American students in Oklahoma.

"Other and Unknown Tribes" include Alabama Quassare and Loyal Shawnee, as well as out-of-state Native American students and unknown tribal affiliations

Almost 40 percent of the students in the Choctaw Nation attend either Southeastern Oklahoma State University or Eastern Oklahoma State College, located in Bryan and Latimer counties, respectively. These counties are within the geographic area that contains the highest concentration of tribal residence, and Durant (in Bryan county) contains the Choctaw Nation's tribal headquarters. Tribal enrollments in public institutions of higher education seem to be distributed similarly for most other tribes; that is, enrollments are higher at institutions that are geographically near the areas of highest concentration of tribal residence and tribal headquarters.

Appendix A contains a detailed listing of tribal representation among Oklahoma public institutions of higher education. Appendix C contains maps that display tribal headquarters and prevalent areas of tribal residency. Perusal of these appendices will show that the tendency, overall, is for students to attend schools closer to home; however, upper-division students must travel farther to complete their education.

Another important tendency is that a higher proportion of Native American students in Oklahoma are more likely to attend institutions where there are large numbers of Native Americans than institutions with low Native American enrollments. Table 12 lists the number of total Native American and institutional administration, faculty and staff, and students, as well as the proportion of Native Americans within each category for each public institution. A large number and proportion of students seem to be highly correlated with a large number and proportion of faculty/staff and administrators. Only 4.6 percent of the 1,993 administrators in the public institutions are Native Americans. Only 3.5 percent of the 12,718 faculty and staff members (part-time and full-time) in the public institutions are Native American.

Finally, Table 13 and Figure 12 examine change in fall semester enrollments over time. It provides the number of Native American students enrolled in each Oklahoma public institution of higher education from fall 1984 to fall 1994. About one-half of the four-year institutions show consistent increases over the ten-year period, whereas the majority of the two-year institutions show an increase over the last five years. Northeastern State University and Southeastern Oklahoma State University show considerable increases in the number of students over time. The increase in SEOSU's enrollment between 1985 and 1986 was the result of a realignment of the institution's data reporting practices with those of the U.S. Department of Education and the Oklahoma State Regents' Unitized Data System (UDS). Prior to 1986, SEOSU only reported Native Americans who were eligible for strict Bureau of Indian Affairs assistance.

Over the ten-year period, 1984 through 1994, the number of Native Americans who attended public institutions increased 131 percent. Two-year institutions have seen a total of 132 percent increase while four-year schools have seen a 129 percent increase. While this may show that four-year schools have done relatively well in increasing Native American attendance, it should be remembered that Northeastern State University and Southeastern Oklahoma State University, combined, had a 107 percent increase from 1978 to 1988. This increase is in part due to the change in reporting practices at Southeastern Oklahoma State University.

A number of other institutions experienced increases and decreases from the base year 1994. Once again, when reviewing changes in enrollments, consideration should be made for changes in recording practices, in-migration and/or out-migration, the existence of agreements between tribes and public institutions of higher education that encourage enrollment at particular institutions, and other types of educational assistance that might encourage Native American enrollments at particular institutions.

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSIONS

SUMMARY AND CONCLUSIONS

Because Oklahoma has both a large number of Native Americans and a large proportion of the total number of Native Americans in the United States, it is important that the state evaluate its performance and that each institution evaluate how well they are doing also.

Native Americans students have gained in representation to the point that it is almost proportional to the population in the state. They are enrolled at two-year institutions at the same rate as the whole student population, but are more likely to enroll in four-year regional universities than in comprehensive universities. Native Americans are much more likely to enroll in institutions closer to home. To complete their education, they tend to travel to institutions with higher proportions of Native American students, administrators, faculty and staff.

Further, Native American students tend to be overrepresented in the lower division or freshman and sophomore classes and underrepresented in the upper division or junior and senior classes. However, they are less likely to be undecided about their declared major. Program enrollments for Native American students and the general student body tend to be similar; however, more Native American students enroll in education.

Native Americans tend to be overrepresented by females. Even though this trend seems apparent for the general student population as well, it is much more distinct for Native American students.

The data in this report have been informational. Analyses as to the recruiting practices of institutions, the relative retention of Native Americans in institutions, the graduation rates of Native Americans, and the participation of Native Americans in the graduate and professional schools have not been addressed.

This document serves The Oklahoma State System of Higher Education by clearly demonstrating that Native Americans are a significant part of higher education participation in Oklahoma. The needs of Native American students must be addressed by Oklahoma given the state's large proportion of Native American participation relative to the United States as a whole. Given the history of Native Americans in higher education both in Oklahoma and the United States, strides made in Native American education in Oklahoma could be the key to successful educational initiatives for the entire country.
